ENGINEERS TO BE EXEMPT

Like Medical Students, They Will Not Be Called Till Graduated.

Students in the School of Engineering of the University will be exempt from the selective draft until after graduation, the same as medical students, according to Washington draft officials. The University of Missouri is one of the 117 engineering schools recognized by the Government.

The draft officials say that engineering students in schools recognized by the War Department were granted virtual exemption from the selective draft under certain conditions as the result of a conference between Secretary Baker, Provost Marshal-General Crowder and officers of engineering societies.

The students are viewed as military assets of the future, and are granted preferred classification, as are medical students in certain cases, so that they may complete their courses. They revert automatically to their former classification on graduation, and may be called out immediately as enlisted men of the engineer reserve.

The problem of engineering students in the draft was presented by M. S. Ketchum of Boulder, Colo., president of the Society for the Promotion of Engineering, and C. R. Mann, dean of Massachusetts Institute of Technology. They filed with Baker copies of resolutions adopted by various engineering societies urging special consideration for engineering students because of the value of such men when trained to the military establishment. About 6,000 students in 117 recognized engineering colleges and schools are affected.

Pineapple Flavor
for Salads or Dessert Jells

This is to urge you to try Jiffy-Jell—perhaps for today's dinner. You should know this new-grade, quick, fruity dessert. It will be a revelation.

It is made with rare grade Waukesha gelatine which costs twice as much as the common.

And it brings you quick desserts and salads with a wealth of ripe-fruit taste. All fruit flavors are made from the fruit itself. They are highly concentrated, so every serving tastes like fresh crushed fruit.

All these liquid flavors come sealed in glass vials. One in each package. So they keep their strength and freshness. You add them when the Jell has partly cooled, so you never scald the flavor.

You will be amazed to learn how Jiffy-Jell dainties excel old-fashioned, quick gelatine desserts. Yet they cost but two cents per serving.
